Dear Mandy,

Being a designated healthcare decision maker produces newfound and extremely heavy responsibilities for those making the potential life altering decisions. My wife and I most definitely felt this as we found ourselves providing care for our loved one. In-home companion care for my wife's mother worked for a while, yet over time, circumstances required a new level of direction for which we were not only totally unfamiliar, but we also had no idea of the magnitude of resolutions this would entail.

I think prior to being introduced to you and your services, I did not know your expertise and practice even existed. Goodness, am I glad we were introduced. In my wife's complete tears and desperation about where to begin, I suggested she call you in hopes that at the very least you could provide suggestions for paths to explore. This was the best call my wife could have made. From the very beginning, you brought calmness and assuredness that all would be well. The advice, direction best to pursue, communications with facilities, (I might add 800 miles away) eventually led us to the right answers where we felt good to present to our loved one their new home. An extremely, emotionally difficult task was made bearable all because of your skillfulness in navigating these unfortunate but often necessary waters. We are still so thankful for the fact and memory that our loved one not only adjusted to the decisions made, but she also thrived in her new home.

Mandy, it is without hesitation that we will and have already strongly recommended you and your professional loving help to anyone needing to steer through the difficult avenues of providing senior care for cherished loved ones.

Best Regards,
