Dear Brooks:

Kitty Pinson was my paralegal for eight years. Unfortunately, she was diagnosed with cancer six years ago. It went into remission a few times and kept coming back. Finally, this summer, she was told by the doctors that there was nothing else that could be done, and she was put in hospice care.

Kitty and I had worked together before I started my own law practice, and we kept in touch even after I left the company. Right after she started hospice, Kitty asked me for a referral to an estate attorney and I wholeheartedly recommended you. She asked me to be the witness, so I saw first-hand the patience and kindness that you showed to her.

Kitty had been one of the best paralegals that I've ever worked with, and she was the most organized person I've ever known. She never met a spreadsheet she didn't like. Even while in hospice, when her mental function was affected by the painkillers, she was busy making arrangements for her own funeral and organizing her disability benefits and medical bills. She believed, and I agree, that her organizational skills were her greatest assets. So, after we left your office, when she told me that she loved how organized you are, I knew that was the highest compliment she could give. She and her husband Charlie both thanked me profusely for referring you and told me that they appreciate not only the work you had done but also how you handled it.

Kitty passed away a couple of weeks ago. This past weekend, at Kitty's funeral, her husband Charlie thanked me again for referring you. He told me that he loved that you and he had so much in common, such as your involvement in the Boy Scouts. He said you are a great attorney. He also said, as a way to pay my referral forward, that he already referred you to Kitty's sister and some other relatives.

I have always admired Kitty, her strength, her positive attitude and unyielding determination to fight her cancer despite the terrible odds. I will miss her very much. And Brooks, I thank you very much for your professionalism and compassion for Kitty in her last weeks. It is easy for me to recommend you, and I am pleased to recommend you at every opportunity.

Best regards,
