Dear Bob,

July 14, 2020

I want to take a moment to thank you for helping my family and me through a difficult time. Having elderly parents isn't easy and when important decisions need to be made, it's good to know there are people I can trust. Decisions about medical directives and powers of attorney are once in a lifetime events that require the proper guidance and expertise that I didn't possess.

The legal part of this, the science if you will, is relatively easy or so it seems to a layman like me. The hardest part is having the sit-down discussion with your parents, siblings and stepsiblings. Everyone seems to have competing issues and desires. In my case, everyone appeared to have our parent's best interest at heart. Your counsel on how to have these difficult decisions made it easier for me to guide the discussion with my siblings and more importantly, to have the all-important discussion with my father, and his wife.

While these discussions are never easy, they are important. I wish I had met you several years ago when we could have had these discussions and made key decisions at a time when issues hadn't become so acute, and even urgent. With your help, we were able to have the discussions and to make decisions for our parents, and their care.

Bob taught me how to lead these discussions and without him, we would have made poor decisions that would have affected my parent's happiness, care and ultimately, their wellbeing.

I whole-heartedly recommend Bob Goldberg to anyone making the tough decisions surrounding elderly parents, their issues and best interests, and their long-term care.

Sincerely,

Jeff Bartholomew
