To Paul Shimek, Attorney At Law,

When I got rear ended in one Atlanta's ice storms, I got an introduction to the wonderful world of insurance adjusters. I was amazed at how crafty their agents were both on the phone and in person. Luckily, I had spoken to you before speaking with them and you had warned me about the tactics they would use to try to minimize their obligation to both me and their clients.

I wish everyone knew you, Paul, and that everyone knew that you should be the very first phone call that someone makes when they get in an accident (assuming, of course, that it is not their fault)... and then call 911.

Having you work through this case with me was very comforting. It's one thing to listen to what Uncle Moe says or the court shows on TV and try to handle these cases on one's own. It's quite another when a professional expert in the field goes to work for you.

In my specific case, the insurance company's adjusters tried to shirk their responsibilities in regards to treatment for injuries I incurred in the accident. Your knowledge of the law and assertiveness pushed them into finally accepting accountability for their bills – and eventually into making the proper payment, covering all of the incurred expenses.

Thank you for your help, Paul. Had I had to pay those bills out of my pocket, it would have created a heavy hardship for my family. You made sure I got the help I needed and that it got paid for.

Sincerely,

Dave Green
