Dear Dan:

I'm not computer savvy, and I know just enough about computers to make me dangerous. That's why I trust you to handle all of my computer needs, whether it's the computer at my law office that is critically important to my livelihood, or my supercomputer at home on which I process award-winning travel photography.

Although you work primarily with larger businesses with computer networks, you have always taken the time to consult and work with me, a small business. As an authorized Dell partner you were able to provide me with the right computers for my needs at reasonable prices. You set them up, installing the latest software, which enables me to work efficiently and productively. There was seldom a problem, but when there was, you were always available, either in person or remotely, to analyze and solve the problem quickly and completely. It seems that there is no computer problem you can't solve. I'm blown away by your technical skills and expertise.

Your competence, credibility, and sincerity are reflected not only in your professional work, but in your long time dedication to PowerCore. I know I can always depend on you, and I highly recommend you to everyone.

Sincerely,

Paul Shimek III,
