Dear Fellow Power Core Member,

What would you do if you had a client who was in trouble, facing a potentially serious financial hardship? I called Emily Webb. She is an attorney at Lawson and Beck in Newnan.

The client was not a criminal, facing an expensive court case or property dispute. The client was a family. One who had pooled their resources to buy a property where their aging mom could live under the same roof with them. When the mother became seriously ill and the family needed to return to another part of the state where mom could be attended by the physicians she knew, it became clear that the family needed to sell their “all under one roof” home. The problem with that? Mom was on the deed to the house, making selling the home and perhaps avoiding a long and drawn out probate period possible only with the help of an attorney.

I called Emily, and Emily helped. Emily arranged to have legal documents put into place to ensure that Mom would be removed from the deed so that other family members would have the legal right to sell the property.

Emily drove from Newnan, GA to LaGrange, GA to meet with the mom and the family in a health care facility. There, she and her associate explained, signed, and witnessed all of the documents necessary. Unfortunately, Mom passed away only days after the documents were in place, but before her death she expressed how grateful she was to know that her family would “not have the headache of dealing with that house”.

I recommend Emily Webb for her willingness to go the extra mile for the client. Her knowledge, compassion and professionalism helped my client avoid further heartbreak in their time of loss.

Warm regards,
