When I asked my wife what she liked about Scott, she said very calmly “He was perfect.” I laughed and said what does that mean? She said “What else can I say, He WAS PERFECT.” She went on to describe how he was always on top of things. As the Executive Assistant to the CEO of a Fortune 500 company, she appreciated his attention to detail and forward thinking. Reminding her to bring her check book for closing. Providing accurate comps and showing up to the inspection and appraisals to help other professionals learn and understand how he viewed the house and its value. I was also impressed with the vision he had due to his experience in remodeling with his rental home business. He was able to show us how we could reconfigure the homes we were considering to make it what we wanted. We bid on one house that Scott had advised against because of his experience with the seller. After we used Scott’s thorough inspector, we found a foundation problem that would have cost over $100,000 to correct.

Needless to say, we always trusted and believed in Scott’s experience, even more so after that situation. In times like these, when there are multiple offers and an environment of overbidding, I feel like Scott used his leadership and counseling skills from his spirituality to guide us and talk us off the ledge in many instances. He was an emotional pillar of strength as my wife and I attempted to find a house we both liked while she was living remotely in Texas. He was patient with us as our price range changed with the changes in interest rates. We also moved our focus from one end of the county to the other. Never once did I sense and frustration from Scott. Sometimes, he would even meet me on a Sunday to tour a house I had found 30 minutes earlier. Purchasing a house is one of the biggest investments you will ever make. I must say that Scott was the best investment we made.
