Re: Ayo Sabo – P&C Agent

To whom it may concern:

My next door neighbor, Ray, died suddenly of a heart attack and left behind a 13 year old son, who had lost his mother at childbirth. Ray's girlfriend of 8 years, Renee, was out of town taking care of her father who had just had a stroke when this occurred. Ray's brother came down from New York, as he was executor of the will, but didn't help out matters very much, and left after 2 weeks taking the family's only vehicle with him.

All of Ray's money was tied up until the estate went to probate, which still hasn't happened 3 months later. So Renee is left without a car or money to survive save the part-time job she has at a local deli. We were finally able to help her find a car to drive that my in-laws were going to donate to charity. But she needed to get the title and tag transferred and needed to get insurance on the car.

I called Ayo late on a Friday afternoon, after 6:30 and he was driving home from work for the weekend. I apprised him of my neighbor's situation and he stopped, on his way home, at a local coffee shop and got her coverage and bound it so that we could go to the tag office the next day and make sure she was able to drive her car without fear of being without insurance.

I don't know of many people that would take the time that Ayo did to stop his weekend plans to help a person he didn't even know. But he is a great asset to the insurance industry.

Ayo is the consummate professional and I would highly recommend him to anyone that needs the services of a P&C agent.

Sincerely,

Robert A. Jackson, CLU
